Speakers' bio

Edward J. Parrott

Senior Partner / Virginia

E-mail: eparrott@watttieder.com

Ned is considered an expert at construction contract dispute avoidance and resolution. He has recently been recognized by his peers for inclusion in Best Lawyers in America in the practice area of Construction Litigation for 2016 and 2017. His clients have come to appreciate his "hands on" approach, as well as his understanding of the importance of cost benefit analysis at every stage of a dispute.

Ned's contracts practice focuses on the resolution of complex contract disputes under federal procurement, state public works, and standard form AIA contracts. Ned represents owners, contractors, subcontractors and A/E firms building United States embassies, all types of military installations, power plants, highways, bridges, and all manner of commercial buildings worldwide. Ned's most recent international experience includes successfully representing a Korean conglomerate building a U.S. military installation and a U.S. contractor building an embassy in Kazakhstan. Ned has negotiated, drafted, and litigated construction contracts of every type and level both locally and on a worldwide basis. Ned's practice also includes bid protests and commercial contract business disputes.

Ned has substantial education, experience and expertise litigating contract disputes at every available forum. Ned is a strong believer in fact based early resolution of disputes through mediation. He has found that obtaining and conveying decisional quality information allows parties to achieve the desired and correct result in much less time than conventional approaches. In construction litigation, legal fees are often related to the duration of the dispute. The longer it goes the more expensive it becomes. Ned prides himself on cost effective dispute resolution. He lectures frequently on topics vital to the construction industry.

Mark Rosencrantz

Partner / Seattle

E-mail: mrosen@watttieder.com

Mark Rosencrantz's practice focuses on solving business and commercial disputes for clients throughout the United States. He understands that litigation is a distraction to his clients that prevents them from living their lives and profitably running their businesses. With that in mind, Mark approaches each matter by first working with his clients to identify their issues and goals, and then mapping out an approach designed to accomplish those objectives, whether that be negotiating an early settlement, getting ready for a "bet the company" trial, or anything in between.

Mark has successfully handled cases involving a wide array of large-dollar business and commercial disputes, with particular emphasis on trade secret misappropriation, violations of non-compete agreements, fraud, bankruptcy, unfair trade practices, real estate, and partnership and corporate disputes. He has obtained multiple multi-million dollar recoveries for his clients and helped others extricate themselves from potential judgments of the same size. Mark has done so before state and federal courts in Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Texas, Arizona, Idaho, Hawaii, Illinois, and New York.

In construction matters, Mark has represented all levels of contractors, as well as owners, in a wide variety of cases involving construction defects, delay and impact claims, bid protests, and copyright infringement of building plans. He has worked on cases involving projects ranging from commercial buildings to condominium projects. He has obtained both large monetary awards and injunctive relief on behalf of his clients.

In addition to his active practice, Mark serves as an arbitrator in the King County Superior Court Mandatory Arbitration Program, and has written and lectured on a variety of legal and business issues.
